Painted splashbacks on regular & low Iron glass.

A natural characteristic of any flat glass is its iron oxide content, creating a slight green tint.

This is quite visible when viewing the glass edges & the wider the glass the darker the shade. Once the glass is painted white or a light colour the tint becomes visible on the non-painted side.

When glass is painted & processed for a splashback darker colours are usually done on regular clear glass as this has little effect on the finished product. However, when a more accurate colour representation is required, such as on whites or lighter colours, low Iron glass is required. Although this greatly assists in creating a true colour representation, our samples may still vary in opacity, finish & performance & can have slight variations. All our paints are hand mixed in batches to order. Low iron glass still contains some iron so although there is much less green than standard float a small amount of green is still visible.

Contributing factors such as viewing panels in a larger expanse, your lighting & the addition of metallic or sparkle finishes can also affect colours. Slight imperfections such as rub marks, bubbles, pin holes, faint scratches and any other imperfections that are not visible from a distance of 3 metres are deemed to be acceptable.

Our representative or team member can provide you with further advice on request & colour samples on request.
